Kate Morgan is a contemporary, mixed-media artist.

Her work celebrates the plants, animals and insects found in a variety of global habitats, particularly those species that are endangered or indigenous.

Her work is vibrant and colourful. Two of her famous pictures are ’Under the Canopy’ and ‘Sleeping Macaws’.

A pencil is often used to draw in detail before adding colour and other media. Colour and tone can be added to drawings to ‘bring them to life’.

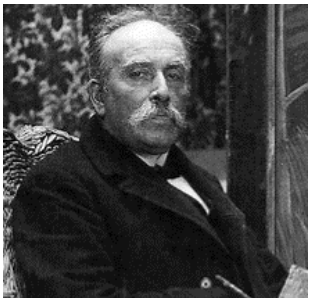

Henri Rousseau was a French artist who started out painting in his spare time.

His style was ‘post impressionism’ which is an abstract style (meaning that he didn’t paint things exactly as they are).

He would compose his paintings in layers. These paintings all started with a background with varying colours blended.

They also included animals hiding behind trees and the moon peeping out from among tree branches. He used his imagination. Can you spot the tiger in ‘Tropical Storm Surprised’?

Learning Objectives
1	I can recognise and describe key features of Kate Morgan’s work.
2	I can observe and replicate using different pencil grades a section of Morgan’s artwork.
3	I can use pastel crayons to add colour and tone to my drawing of Morgan’s artwork.
4	I can observe and discuss Henri Rousseau paintings and understand he used layering as a technique.
5	I can show what I have learnt.
